

MEET THE 2016/2017 UofMOSAIC FELLOWS @ UNIVERSITY OF GUELPH

Danielle McNabb

justice | equality | conflict resolution

I am currently in my 3rd year at the University of Guelph, majoring in Political Science and minoring in Criminal Justice and Public Policy. My academic interests and research focuses include female genital mutilation specifically in African nations and Aboriginal issues. I am currently a Peer Contact for the Political Science department at my university, where I mentor younger students academically, and help to host events that promote political awareness. In addition, I volunteered for a research project entitled "Women's Perceptions of Campus Safety through Participatory Photography". Through my own experience I was able to consult researchers on campus safety in an attempt to make it a safer environment for women. This past summer I also got selected to conduct field research in Venice, Italy. I hope to gain from this Fellowship more hands on experience in the field of social justice, and to make an active difference in my school, and the global community.

Emily Nunez

global health | indigenous health

Emily is a 4th year student majoring in Biomedical Science at the University of Guelph. She is also minoring in Neuroscience and completing certificates in Civic Engagement & Global Citizenship and in Aboriginal Affairs. She is actively involved on campus as Chair of the Board, and the Chair of the Policy Committee for the College of Biological Science Student Council, Campus Program Coordinator for Leave the Pack Behind, and student representative on the University of Guelph Judicial Committee. Emily's research interests include pediatric pain communication, climate change and health, and Indigenous health. Her current project is exploring the burden of acute gastrointestinal illness in an Indigenous Shawi population in the Peruvian Amazon.

Katrin Bell

politics | human rights | environmental conservation

I am currently going into my 4th year at the University of Guelph where I am working on a major in International Development and a minor in Politics. I am interested in human rights, food security, environmental conservation and politics. I am a member of the Universities Fighting World Hunger club, and last year I spent a month in rural Cuba studying agroecology. This past winter I also completed a 4 month semester abroad in India. I'm hoping to use this Fellowship as an opportunity to use some of the skills that I have gained in other areas of my life and put them towards fields that interest me and I hope to pursue post-graduation. I am also hoping to do some networking and meet other students/people with similar interests and goals as me!

Madison Milne-Ives

integration | connection | behaviour

Hello! My name is Madison Milne-Ives, and I am a 4th year student at the University of Guelph. I am doing a BAS degree, with concentrations in Neuroscience and Political Science. I chose these areas of study because I am interested in investigating behaviour from different perspectives to achieve deeper insight. I have engaged with my university community by volunteering in a variety of ways: as a Supported Learning Group leader, to promote student learning in challenging academic courses; in a program called GetREAL, which works to combat student homophobia; and in my BAS Student Association, where I helped to plan, organize, and run a Combining Two Cultures Conference designed to bring together students in interdisciplinary programs from different universities. I have had incredible opportunities to learn about different global issues, so I plan to foster important dialogue on campus by sharing experiences with other students.
